

David Cartwright

David's coaching experience has been honed in the private sector where, over a period of 20 years, he has held a number of CEO/MD roles. He aims to bring the pace and rigour of the private sector to the NHS where an increasingly discerning public expects professional and highly accountable leadership. He believes a leadership population that is cohesive, clear and engaging can deliver a quality and cost-effective public service.

David's coaching philosophy is built upon the belief that individuals and teams have the majority of the solutions at their fingertips. They simply need a helping hand to unlock and formulate these into a cogent plan.

His approach to coaching is very pragmatic. As a frontline operator and strategist he is unequivocal about the need to deliver results. In coaching there are two primary outcomes; the results we set out to achieve for ourselves and others and the experiential learning gained from the journey itself.

Experience

David's executive career has been spent re-building and re-focusing enterprises throughout Europe. These have varied in size from mid-sized corporations to family owned SME's. He summarises his personal contribution and expertise as leading large change and strategy management programs.

His coaching experience includes senior corporate executives, business owners, university undergraduates and young entrepreneurs. In 2007 he was awarded a Masters Degree in Coaching. In his spare time he lectures on Strategy and Change Management and runs Business Management workshops for aspiring Young European Entrepreneurs as well as Young Unemployed People.
